Scholarship is more of a collaborative enterprise than we tend to admit when we put just a single name on the cover page of any book, and this book, like most others, is a collective effort displaying the name of a single individual. Although I have long been interested in religious violence in Nigeria, having experienced the early parts of the 1980 Maitatsine religious riots in Kano and having lost a first cousin in one of the city's numerous religious conflicts, my first sustained academic interest in the subject came in 2007 when, along with Professors Funmi Olonisakin and James Gow, I worked on an Economic and Social Research Council grant awarded to King's College London on religious radicalization and political violence in West Africa. However, this book owes more to another grant, this one from the Carnegie Corporation of New York to the African Leadership Centre at King's College London's School of Global Affairs to research peace, society, and the state in Africa. My first debts are to these institutions for these awards.

My list of individual appreciations is long. To start with, I am grateful to my colleagues at the African Leadership Centre. The friendship within the team is much more than superficial camaraderie. It is as genuine as it is all-encompassing. First to be mentioned at the Centre, of course, is Professor Funmi Olonisakin. After more than thirty years together at King's College London, Funmi and I have become a "professional item." Together, we passed through the flames of hardship, and emerged purified! I thank the other members of the team: Drs. Eka Ikpe, Olawale Ismail, Barney Walsh, David Mwambari, Olaf Batchman, Sarah Nyeri, and Sonja Theron. Similarly to be recognized at the Centre are Shuvai Nyoni, Adeoti Dipeolu, Nayanka Perdigao, Telema Georgewill, Fola Aina, Damilola Adegoke, Kingsley Chukwu, Sylvanus Wekesa, Ademijulo Obafemi-Olopade, Alfred Muteru, and Jacob Kamau.

Also important to be acknowledged at King's College London are the life-long career opportunities offered by Professor (Sir) Lawrence Freedman. Indeed, if there be any (as I guess there may be a few) who rejoice at what I have been able to achieve in my career, it is to God and Sir Lawrence that their gratitude is due. I also want to mention the friendship and support of Professor Jack Spence, Dr. Barrie Paskin, and professors Keith Hoggart, Frans Berkhout, James Gow, and Mats Berdal. Thanks too to Professor James Mayall, Emeritus Sir Patrick Sahee Professor of International Relations at Cambridge, for his friendship over the decades.

My very deep gratitude also goes to the following people: Professors Jacob Olupona, the doyen of religious studies in Nigeria; Simeon Ilesanmi, whose knowledge on the philosophical underpinnings of religion in Nigeria is unrivaled; Wale Adebawale, whose exceptional brilliance made me take a second look at issues; and Olufemi Taiwo, whose originality of thought has made a tremendous impact on me over the decades. Professors Toyin Falola, Olufemi Vaughan, Mathews Ojo, Ebenezer Obadare, the late Abdul Raufu Mustapha, and Dr. Hassan Kukah should also be acknowledged as their works on the politics of religion in Nigeria served as my Rosetta Stone. Many thanks too to my adopted "son," Abdulbasit Kassim of Rice University, who freely placed at my disposal his extensive knowledge of Boko Haram, and to Dr. Ini Dele Adediji, who, at the last minute, volunteered to read the entire manuscript. I am also grateful to professors Niyi Osundare, Kyari Muhammed, A. G. Adebayo, Adigun Agbaje, Tade Aina, Chris Alden, Hakeem Danmole, Sola Akinrinade, Ibrahim Rashid, Bayo Olukoshi, Alade Fawole, Ademola Popoola, Dele Layiwola, Adebayo Oyeade, Solomon Akinboye, Abdullahi Zuru, Kasali Adegoke, Ayodeji Omotayo, Ibrahim Jawondo, Amadu Sesay, Seyi Ojo, Tony Olusanya, Tayo Adesina, Wahab Egbewole, Ademola Abass, the late Layi Abegunrin, and Akin Alao. My gratitude also goes to Drs. Akin Oyetade, Temilade Abimbola, Obiyemi Obiseye, Akin Iwilade, Joseph Aihie, Awino Okech, Kunle Ojeleye, Comfort Ero, Ranti Lawumi, Tunde Afolabi, the late Thomas Jaye, Kehinde Bolaji, Penda Diallo, Fatima Akilu, Remi Oyewumi, and Jide Akanji. Also, former Nigerian Chief of Defence Staff Lt. General Martin Agwai (Rtd.), Rear Admiral Bolanle Aki-John (Rtd.), Rear Admiral Babs Egbedina (Rtd.), Adewale Ajadi, Ambassador Martin Uthmaniyah, Yisa Abdulkareem Oke (YKO), Idiat Babalola, Debo Olawuyi, and Dr. Sunkanmi Shadare were very helpful. I thank them.

My association with the Nigerian Defence Academy as a visiting professor was extremely useful. I am grateful to the former commandant, Major General Inua Idris (Rtd.), for the opportunity to be attached to the academy and for the several hours of debate and discussion on Nigeria's security. I also benefited from discussions with many serving officers of the Nigerian Defense Force. As would be expected, the sensitive positions most of them occupy caution against mentioning them by name. I cannot thank them enough for sharing with me their insights and experiences. Thanks too to colleagues on the governing councils of Osun State University Oshogbo and the Federal University of Petroleum Resources, Effurun.

The editors of the Duke University Press series Religious Cultures of African and African Diaspora People, professors Jacob Olupona, Terrence Johnson, and Dianne Stewart, have affectionately and generously guided this book through the publishing process. I am very grateful to them. Equally, I want to thank the commissioning editor of the series, Miriam Angress, for all her support in seeing this book through production and for tolerating my overbearing emails. Many thanks, Miriam!

Five families hosted me during my numerous research trips to Nigeria, those of Dotun and Jumoke Adeniyi, Suleiman Baba and Zainab Ali, Danlami Abubakar and Mariam Sule, Mallam Yusuf Olaolu Ali, Senior Advocate of Nigeria (SAN), and Labo Popoola. These families provided friendship and comfort such that the only unhappy moments of my stays with them were the departures. Really, I don't know what I did to deserve friends like them, but whatever it was, I am glad I did it. I also want to thank them for the numerous discussions we had on the politics of religion in Nigeria. Mallam Yusuf Ali should again be specially thanked for granting me undisturbed access to his extremely rich library.

Thanks more than I can ever say to many family members and friends, including Professor and Mrs. J. O. Fawole, Professor M. O. Fawole, Bayo and Made Bello, Demola and Ronke Salau, Bishop Paul and Pastor Joyce Fadeyi, Eniola Fagbure, Doyin and Wemimi Sheyindemi, Laja and Bimbo Mustapha, Isiaka and Tinu Oyebamiji, Deola and Bunmi Magbadelo, Atta Barkindo, Bode and Laide Esan, Remi and Funmi Adeseun, "Ogbeni" Rauf Aregbesola, Christie Adejoh, Kayode and Bisi Fayemi, Olufemi and Ngozi Edun, Oyewole and Jibike Oyewumi, Yemi Aderemi, Segun Obafemi, Abiodun Onadipe, Ozonnia Ojielo, Remi and Remi Ajibewa, Wumi Morohundiya, Engineer Tunde and Mrs. Grace Ponnle, Ademola Aladekomo, Jide and Rowena Fawole, Kayode and Lucy Fawole, Bisi Fawole, Wale and Doyin Afolabi, Akin and Funmi Onifade, Olaloye Badamosi, Dr. Banjo and Dr. (Mrs.) Adeola Adeleke, Bode Adesida, Segun Adeniyi of This Day newspaper, Yinka and Kibby Oduwaiye, Dale and Funke Ojutiku, Kale and Kudi Belgore, Wale Fagbohungebe, Kenny and Augusta Alowoesin, Wale Afolabi, Dewumi and Kemi Oyemade, Sam and Wumi Omokan, Jumai Ndalugi, Gboyega Akinsanmi, and Brodericks Arigbodi.

My siblings continue to make the word family ever so meaningful. I am extremely grateful to Olufemi, Kayode, Funmi, Folasade, and Olusayo. The greatest gratitude, however, goes to my immediate family. My children, Fiyinfolu and Ajibola, continue to be sources of inexpressible delight. That we now share academic interests has also meant that we discussed aspects of the book, sometimes fruitfully disagreeing. I am particularly happy that they are maintaining the family tradition of independent thought. My wife, Ronke, has remained my central source of support and the engine room for the entire family. It is impossible to thank her enough. As I have said several times: in the lottery of life, when it comes to marriage, I hit the jackpot. Thanks more than I can ever say, Ronke.
