

Acknowledgments

This book owes its fruition to a great number of people and places. It cuts across three countries and two continents on both sides of the Atlantic. It is an impossible task to give due recognition to each person who has been part of this arduous yet rewarding journey, but I will try my best. First and foremost, my biggest gratitude is to trans and queer activists and feminists in Turkey. I owe a solemn debt to all my lubunya friends, kin, collaborators, and comrades who made this book possible by welcoming me into their lives with immense generosity and care. I am grateful for the trust they granted in sharing with me their lives, stories, joys, and sorrows. They have touched and shaped my life and me as a person in ways that I cannot find words to describe. I can only hope that this book lives up to their trust, love, and political rage by contributing to building better queer/trans feminist worlds together in Turkey and beyond.

Writing this book required a set of skills and tools to see the world differently and to understand it critically. I consider myself extremely lucky to have attained most of them during my undergraduate and master's years at Boğaziçi University in Istanbul, where I made incredible friendships in courses, student clubs, collectives, political campaigns, and extracurricular creative activities. The academic environment at Boğaziçi has deeply shaped my passion for intellectual life and critical knowledge production and its transformative capacities. I would like to express my sincere gratitude to my mentors, Nazan Üstündağ, Nükhet Sirman, Şemsa Özar, Ayfer Bartu Candan, Meltem Ahıska, Belgin Tekçe, and Zafer Yenil, for their formative role in my critical and analytic thinking. The vibrant campus life at Boğaziçi offered me and many others the gift of intellectual curiosity, creative and imaginative living, and passion for social and political transformation. Without this environment I would not be the thinker I am today.

The first phase of this book grew out of a stimulating academic environment at the University of Toronto. Mentors and colleagues were tremendously helpful and motivating while I was writing up my research. I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to Holly Wardlow, Naisargi Dave, and Andrea Muehlebach for their consistent support, motivation, and guidance. Many thanks to Michael Lambek, Janice Boddy, and Don Kulick for providing me with critical feedback. Several other faculty members at UToronto made my doctoral studies rewarding with their enthusiasm and encouragement. Special thanks to Amira Mittermaier, Valentina Napolitano, Donna Young, Krista Maxwell, Girish Daswani, and Christopher Krupa.

My time at Toronto introduced me to wonderful friends from across the world. Without their support and love it would have been extremely difficult to survive not only the doctoral program but also the long, harsh winters in the city. Our long nights of conversation, music, dance, games, and booze, made my life as a migrant academic possible in many ways. My warmest thanks to friends who knew how not to let life be taken over by academia but rather shared and enriched it to the fullest whenever they could. I deeply appreciate you in my life, Seçil Dağtaş, Vivian Solana, Daniella Jofre, Timothy Mwangeka Makori, Janne Dingemans, Özlem Aslan, Ümit Aydoğmuş, Deepa Rajkumar, Melanie Richter-Montpetit, Columba Gonzalez Duarte, Nora Tataryan, Alejandra Gonzalez, Begüm Uzun, Andrew Paruch, Burak Köse, Tuğçe Ellialtı, Ayşegül Koç, Nima Maleki, Shihoko Nakagawa, Jacob Nerenberg, Saafi Warsame, Nayrouz Abu-Hatoum, Salma Atassi, Coco Guzman, Zoya, Behzad Sarmadi, Glen Chua, Dylan Gordon, Nishant Uphadhyay, and Preethy Sivakumar. I would also like to extend my warm thanks to my friends from the anthropology department, Anna Kruglova, Rastko Cvekic, Kate Rice, Sharon Kelly, Laura Sikstorm, Chantelle Falconer, Hollis Moore, Sardar Saadi, and Nermeen Mouftah, and others in the Dissertation Writing Group, for making my graduate experience memorable and collegial. Last but not least, friends and comrades I met through our local public employee union (CUPE 3902), No One Is Illegal, and Queers against Israeli Apartheid have taught me a lot about cultivating and maintaining strong relations between the worlds of activism and academia. Thanks to all of them.

I have gained significant critical insights through my conversations with established scholars in the field of anthropology at panels, conferences, and workshops. Many thanks to Henrietta Moore, Elizabeth Povinelli, Tom Boellstorff, Ellen Lewin, David Valentine, Yael Navaro, Mary Weismantel, and Evelyn Blackwood. I am grateful for all their feedback and keen engagements with my research in the earlier phase of this book. This book benefited immensely from the financial support that I received through grants, fellowships, and awards over the course of my career. I am grateful for financial assistance from the University of Toronto, the Lorna Marshall Doctoral Fellowship in Social and Cultural Anthropology, the Ontario Graduate Scholarship, the Melissa J. Knauer Award for Feminist Research, the Fellowship in Ethnographic Writing at the Center for Ethnography at the University of Toronto–Scarborough, and the Association for Feminist Anthropology Dissertation Award.

My thanks to colleagues at the University of California, Berkeley; the University of Cambridge; Columbia University; Harvard University; Swarthmore College; Brown University; Washington University in St. Louis; the University of British Columbia; the College of William and Mary; Boston University; Amherst College; the University of Minnesota; Bilgi University; SOAS University of London; Utrecht University; the University of Tennessee; Rutgers University; Concordia University; Sabancı University; and Koç University for inviting me to share my work and providing me with insightful feedback. These invitations were made possible by Gül Özyeğin, Mino Moallem, Osman Balkan, Sima Shakhshari, Sahar Sadjadi, Nadjé Al-Ali, Sophie Chamas, Nisrine Chaer, Zahra Ali, Maya Mikdashi, Tamar Shirinian, Yağmur Nuhrat, Fırat Kurt, Dina Al Kassim, Roberta Micallef, Denise Gill, Burak Delier, and Zeyno Pekünlü.

My academic journey took me to many institutions until I settled down in a tenure-track position in the Department of Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at Rutgers University. Postdoctoral life has taught me serious lessons about the precarity of the neoliberal academic job market in North America. I spent my first year as a PhD adjuncting at two different institutions in two different towns in Ontario while holding a research fellowship in sexuality studies at the Center for Feminist Research at York University, which I thank for providing me with the opportunity to share my research. My first postdoctoral fellowship started my migration to the United States, where I worked as an Allen-Berenson fellow in the Department of Women's, Gender, and Sexuality Studies at Brandeis University. I am grateful for the great intellectual support and motivation that I received from several colleagues at Brandeis. Many thanks to Susan Lanser, Wendy Cadge, Sarah Lamb, Anita Hill, Aliyyah Abdur-Rahman, Anita Hannig, ChaeRan Yoo Freeze, Elizabeth Ferry, Ellen Schattschneider, Roanne Kantor, and Hikmet Kocamaner. After Brandeis, I relocated to Harvard Divinity School as a research and teaching fellow in the Women's Studies in Religion Program. Our program director, Ann D. Braude; my brilliant colleagues, Kimberly Blockett, Ferial Khalifa, Laura Prieto, and Avital Davidovich-Eshed; and our program administrator, Tracy Wall, made my academic experience highly rewarding. It was also exceptionally delightful to connect with other faculty members at Harvard and benefit from our conversations. My warmest gratitude to Afsaneh Najmabadi, Leila Ahmed, Cemal Kafadar, George Paul Mieu, Robin Bernstein, Mark Jordan, Mayra Rivera, Durba Mitra, and Ahmed Ragab.

Both Brandeis and Harvard introduced me to the wider bustling and inspiring academic environment in the Boston area. I was extremely lucky to meet people who made my life intellectually and socially fulfilling. My heartfelt thanks to my household in Somerville: Mai Taha, Bettina Stoetzer, Yajun Mo, and Vivian Solana; and to beautiful friends: Zeynep İnanc, Bengi Baran, Can Akkaya, Gaye Özpınar, Emrah Altındış, Hikmet Kocamaner, Volkan Gündüz, Kaan Apaydın, Caterina Scaramelli, Rupa Pillai, Tom Abowd, Armanç Yıldız, Eric Biesterfeld, Alma Nizam, Hussam Jefee-Bahloul, Pep Serra, and Alvaro Ebuerto. They made Boston a third home for me by filling my life with their care, fun, joy, and support.

After Harvard, I moved to Providence for the Louise Lamphere Visiting Assistant Professorship in the Department of Anthropology and the Pembroke Center at Brown University. The rigorous and collegial academic environment at Brown introduced wonderful people to my life: Nadje Al-Ali, Georgina Manok, Alex Winder, Rawan Arar, Aliya Sabharwal, Jose Itzigshon, Meltem Toksöz, Emre Yağın, Brian Landor, Elizabeth Lord, Dario Valles Sepulveda, Robert Chlala, Fulya Pınar, Anıl Aşkın, and Rui Gomes Coelho. I deeply treasure our conversations, dinner parties, dance nights, hiking trips, and COVID-time picnics. I am also grateful to Lina Fruzetti, Rebecca Carter, Paja Faudree, Shahzad Bashir, Bishara Doumani, Daniel Jordan Smith, Jessica Leinaweaver, Parker VanValkenburgh, Yannis Hamilakis, and Barbara Oberkoetter for making Brown a welcoming institutional home for me.

This book's editorial journey at Duke first started with Sandra Korn and continued with Courtney Berger. I consider myself extremely lucky to have had the opportunity to work with these two phenomenal editors whose guidance was the best I could ever ask for. Some sections in this book were previously published in peer-reviewed academic journals: Anthropologica, Journal for Middle East Women's Studies, and Cultural Anthropology. While revisiting these discussions, I revised them significantly.

Several colleagues and friends read parts of this book and provided remarkable insights. Many thanks to Seçil Dağtaş, Elif Babül, Christopher Dole, Dana Luciano, Ayşe Parla, Sinan Gökner, Seçil Yılmaz, Aslı İğsız, Elif Sarı, Begum Adalet, Beren Azizi, Özge Gözke, Hayal Akarsu, and Claudia Castenada. The work-in-progress workshop organized by my colleague Brittney Cooper at Rutgers provided me with a great opportunity to share a chapter draft with my colleagues in the department. I would like to express my special thanks to Brittney Cooper, Ethel Brooks, Maya Mikdashi, Kyla Schuller, Louisa Schein, Carlos Decena, and Evelyn Autry for their constructive engagement with my research. Maya Mikdashi, Evren Savcı, Sima Shakhshari, and Gökçe Günel read different versions of the full manuscript. Their close and careful reading and insightful feedback improved this book immensely.

The support, care, and love I receive from across the ocean has been exceptional since I moved to North America. Each time I visit Turkey, I am welcomed with unconditional love and care by my kin. My most profound thanks to Senem Erdoğan, Öznur Şahin, and Seçil Dağtaş for being my lifelong sisters, bringing so much beauty and wisdom into my life, and never leaving me alone. My wholehearted gratitude to another circle of amazing friends for sharing moments of trouble and happiness over decades: Oyman Başaran, Hazal Halavut, Nora Tataryan, Özlem Aslan, Ceren Yartan, Zeynep Atay, Cemre Baytok, Ali Paşaoğlu, Elif Çelik, Seçil Yılmaz, Sertaç Sehlikoğlu, and Mustafa Avcı. It was heartbreaking to lose Zeliş, Ali Arıkan, and Boysan Yakar, but their spirits have never left me and have animated the pages of this book. I feel blessed to have many other friends and colleagues who have contributed to the creativity, collectivity, solidarity, joy, and laughter in my life. Many thanks to Imge Oranlı, Gülkan Noir, Ari Büyük, Demet Demir, Ebru Kırancı Binder, Ece, Şevval Kılıç, Deniz, Eylem Çağdaş, İlksen Gürsoy, Kerem, Ecem, Matu, Nurgül Özz, Sema Semih, Bawer Çakır, Suna Kafadar, Begüm Başdaş, Özge Gözke, Kanno Akkaya, Alp Biricik, Yener Bayramoğlu, Emrah Yıldız, Banu Bargu, Amahl Bishara, Marlene Schafers, Nukhet Varlık, Alize Arıcan, Fırat Fırat, Berfu Seker, İlker Çakmak, Feride Eralp, Özgür Sevgi Göral, Derya Aydın, Leman Sevda Darıcıoğlu, Başak Can, Ergin Bulut, Nadya Mikdashi, Ziad Mikdashi, and my little bestie Zayn.

My family made my academic life possible by providing their decades-long support. I am grateful to my parents. My brothers, Atakan and Ibrahim, have always emotionally supported me with my research and my life decisions. I am privileged to have their love, tenderness, esteem, and care, and have the utmost gratitude for their presence in my life.

And the final thank you is for Maya Mikdashi, whose invaluable support, caring critique, and unconditional love have been a great treasure while inhabiting arduous times and places together. Words are not enough to express my appreciation for her presence in this life and for her brilliance, light, and laughter that she continues to throw into this world every single day.
